

RACE VIOLENCE: THE TRUE FACTS

Despite news media hysteria over attacks on immigrants, most of the victims are white

THE MASS MEDIA are currently engaged in stirring up a wave of public hysteria over alleged 'racial attacks' by white people upon members of ethnic minorities, both in Britain and overseas. During the past weeks there have been repeated scare stories about so-called 'neo-nazis' in Germany firebombing refugee hostels and engaging in personal assaults on immigrants. These have been paralleled by similar sensationalist reports of alleged racial incidents here in the United Kingdom. The general picture portrayed for the consumption of the viewing and reading public is one of poor, downtrodden coloured folk and other aliens on the receiving end of constant acts of white brutality, much of it inspired by so-called 'right-wing extremist' political groups.

But the reality is very different. Certainly some violent incidents do take place in which immigrants are the victims, both in Britain and elsewhere in Europe. However, in the vast majority of cases there is no evidence that such attacks have a racial or political motive; they are just part of the general wave of lawlessness that is engulfing nations all over the world where government and law-enforcement is soft and thugs and criminals have been given the green light to run amok. What actually happens is that there are politically motivated pressure groups, in this country and overseas, which immediately seize upon these incidents and record them as 'racial' or 'political', regardless of the evidence. In this way a large and frightening catalogue of violence is built up which is then conveniently laid at the door of 'racist' groups. By this technique, all white people in Britain and abroad who oppose their countries being overrun by immigrants are linked by association with the attackers.

This thoroughly suits the book of those who have a vested interest in promoting immigration and multi-racialism.

White victims ignored

Much more to the point, the cases where immigrants are subjected to attacks by Whites are far outweighed in number by those where immigrants themselves are the attackers and Whites are the victims. Equally conveniently, these are only very rarely recorded as 'racial' or 'political'. Also, they are given far less media publicity — when the media will condescend to mention them at all!

Elsewhere in this issue we highlight a case in Scotland, in which a group of white Glasgow children leaving school on their way home were set upon and savagely beaten by a gang of older and bigger Asians, some of them wielding knives, baseball bats and lead piping. This incident was so outrageous and caused such a local stir that the news media in Scotland could not avoid reporting it. However, there was scarcely any mention of it on TV or in the papers elsewhere in the United Kingdom — which have been screaming almost every day over the past month or so about 'racist' attacks by Whites on coloured people in Britain, Germany and elsewhere. We only heard of the incident ourselves through our contacts in the British National Party in Scotland.

Violent attacks by members of one race upon another are to be deplored, whichever race is the attacker and whichever is the victim. We should not weep tears over one type of attack while ignoring another.

The way to end all race violence is by ending the multi-racial society and sending the immigrants home — peacefully.

ATTEMPTED GENOCIDE

NOW that Britain's multi-racial experiment is turning into the kind of chaos that we have always predicted it would, it's time to take stock of how it all happened, what it means, and what is to be done about it.

Less than half a century ago, Britain was a stable, internally peaceful land made up of people overwhelmingly of one kind. The way in which this was changed is a tale of lies, treachery and tyranny unparalleled in history.

A short time before this all began, British people were being told that they had to hold off foreign invasion by fighting it on the beaches, in the fields and on the streets, and that above all, they were never to surrender.

The type of politicians at the head of the nation who were telling us this sort of thing when it was a question of resisting an alleged white would-be invader of Britain miraculously changed their tune when it is an only too real and actual invasion by non-Whites.

Now it is required of British folk that, like little lambs, they meekly surrender the historic homeland their ancestors fought like lions for, and to surrender it virtually on demand to the biggest and most alien influx that the country has ever known — an influx which our politicians deliberately started in the first place and now show no true sign of meaning to stop.

A vast effort has been put into twisting the values, destroying the will to survive, lulling to sleep and suppressing by law the resistance of the British people to this process, involving every agency of established power in the land.

It is still remembered how, when mass Afro-Asian immigration began in earnest in the 1950s the politicians and media got together to coo the populace to sleep with soothing assurances that it was "nothing to worry about."

Everybody knows now what a lie this was. Today, before our eyes, huge swaythes of our country have become alien enclaves from which native Britons have been driven and displaced just as surely, if not in a way so well-publicised, as have people in latter-day Bosnia.

Let there be no mistake, multi-racialism means death to the nation that practises it. Its end result, if it's pressed far enough, is the biological destruction of the people who make up the nation. Britain's political masters obviously intend that multi-racialism is to be pressed that far. Their every action proves it, from their handing over the streets to ethnic minority rioters — thus giving a green light to racial violence against native Britons — to their continuing admission of hundreds of thousands of Afro-Asian immigrants to this country every year.

There never has been treason quite like this. Individuals or groups of people in previous ages may have conspired against this or that king or queen. Many have gone to the scaffold as traitors for such acts down the ages.

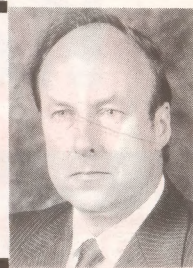

But today it almost seems as if the whole of the state, whose function ought to be to promote the good of the nation, is plotting and promoting what amounts to the genocide of the nation.

The British people need to act to stop this treason while there is still time.

Their one hope of doing so is to back the British National Party and sweep it to power, so that the traitors of the present can be replaced by a patriotic government which will guarantee the British people's future.

The trade deficit: time for ACTION

comments

ALARM AND DESPONDENCY have greeted the release of October's trade figures, which show a deficit of £1,063 million with the rest of the world. This of course is nothing new; for a long time Britain has been buying from much more than she has been selling to other nations. Nevertheless, every time statistics are produced which remind us of this fact there is a renewed spate of introspection in the media. Michael Toner, writing in the Daily Mail on the 24th November, lamented:-

"Another month's trade figures arrive, with another bleak commentary on Britain's chronic inability to pay her way in the world... When the November figures are published, they will be even worse. December promises no respite. We shall end the year close to £12 billion in the red — and this in the depths of the worst recession since the Thirties."

In the meantime, Economics Correspondent Anne Segall, writing in the Daily Telegraph on the same day, spoke of the cost of imported goods having risen sharply in the wake of the 12 per cent devaluation of the Pound. And she continued:-

"The rise in the October import bill to its highest level for 30 months was greeted with dismay in the City. 'Export earnings rose by 3½ per cent in October, helping to blunt the impact of the five per cent rise in the import bill...'"

In other words, devaluation failed in one of its principal objectives, which was to bring about a turn-around in our trade balance. Our exports rose because prices were more attractive to customers abroad, but this rise was offset by the greater cost of imports resulting from foreign goods being more expensive to British buyers.

Government with will needed

But back to Mr. Toner. What of his comment about "Britain's chronic inability to pay its way in the world"? In fact this is nonsense. We could pay our way in the world at any time that a government emerged which showed the will to do so.

When a family is spending beyond its means, the simple remedy is usually accepted by everyone: the head of the family rules that unnecessary purchases must be cut, so that income balances expenditure. And this is what is done. Why can it not be done by nations?

If Britain is purchasing goods from abroad far in excess of what it is selling abroad, any government worthy of the name would rule that unnecessary purchases should be stopped. And the fact is that we are making a vast quantity of unnecessary purchases from abroad — purchases of manufactured goods which we used to produce in British factories and ought to be producing in British factories today. In addition to this, we are even purchasing large quantities of foreign coal — while the Government is talking of closing down 31 British coal mines and putting that many thousands of British miners on the scrapheap.

To the average man in the street, as to the average businessman, this is sheer insanity. But to our politicians it is economic orthodoxy from which we dare not and must not depart!

No power of decision

Britain's power to take the decisions which determine her own economic health is today atrophied by all manner of international agreements and policies by which she is prevented placing curbs on imports which are destroying her whole industrial fabric. Yet no British Government will repudiate those agreements and policies, the major ones of which are GATT (the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade) and of course our membership of the European Community.

We must now repudiate these agreements and policies, and we must resume the power to take our own decisions over matters of trade. We must, by an act of government, stop the imports that our destroying our economic health.

Groundless arguments

One standard argument put forth by the politicians is that Britain must be in the EC in order to maintain her exports to Europe. This amounts to yet more nonsense. Swedish motor vehicles are to be found in profusion on the roads of all the EC countries, yet Sweden is not an EC member. Neither of course is Japan, which exports a vast amount to the countries of the Community. The latter fact also provides an answer to another argument, which is that if Britain takes steps to exclude certain imports this will invite retaliatory action against British exports. Japan has been keeping manufactured imports out of her market for years, but it has not affected her exports.

The time has come for Britain to operate a policy similar to that of Japan: to phase out imports of manufactured products and also of coal — to the point at which almost all our requirements in these items are produced in Britain itself.

This will put our balance of trade back into the black. It will also accomplish something else: it will enable us to find work for the whole of our near-three million unemployed.

This was one of the major policies on which the British National Party contested the 1992 election. It is a policy which is now being amply justified by events.

If we do not take our destiny into our own hands and introduce such a policy before long, this country is headed for total economic collapse.

This DISunited Europe

THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITY is supposed to have been formed to bring about peace, conciliation and harmony among European nations.

Not much peace, conciliation and harmony last month, when French farmers were seen to be staging hostile demonstrations against Britain during which a Union Jack was burned (see picture on right).

Nor is it the first time the Frogs have been demonstrating against us. Remember the attacks on British lorries carrying lamb not long ago?

The latest of the French farmers' demonstrations has been against the agreement to carry out the letter of GATT (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade) whereby subsidies to them would be cut in order to strike a deal with America over that country's farm exports to Europe. The deal would make the cost of food cheaper in the countries of the EC but it would hit the farmers of France, who have been protected by the EC's Common Agricultural Policy, which keeps food prices artificially high in order to keep farmers on the land.

Britain would benefit from the GATT deal in respect of food prices and has supported the agreement — hence the burning of the Union Jack. On the other hand, it would do no good to our manufacturing industries, which would be exposed to yet more competition from outside the EC.

But the French farmers would most certainly not benefit — nor would France as a whole, since the farmers constitute a large and important part of that country's economy. It may seem rather childish to burn Britain's flag (burning the blue and white EC flag might be a much more appropriate gesture) but the farmers' cause is a perfectly just one when things are looked at from their point of view.

COMMON MARKET BUT NOT COMMON INTERESTS
French farmer burns Union Jack in demonstration last month against GATT

Why shouldn't they do what is necessary to protect their livelihoods?

It all goes to underline what this paper has said for a long time: that the European nations have, in many ways, separate and different interests. The idea of a common 'European' interest, making for common European policies is a myth.

If the EC were allowed to die a natural death, and the European nations left to pursue their own individual interests by means of their own distinct national policies, there would almost certainly be more peace, harmony and conciliation among those nations rather than less. We would not be getting in each other's way. We would not be trying to reconcile the irreconcilable — by making French interests always compatible with British ones, British with German, German with Italian, and so on. We would be less in rivalry with one another, and therefore less likely to squabble and fight.

Britain, in any case, can get the cheaper food she wants without GATT. She can quit the EC and return to close trading ties with the countries of the White Commonwealth, giving import preference to their agricultural products in return for preferential entry terms to British exports of manufactured goods.

By economic and political disengagement from Europe, we can in fact make relations with our neighbours in Europe much better.

But one wouldn't suppose, of course, that this has ever occurred to our politicians in Westminster!

FOUL!

JOHN MAJOR is a nice man. In fact, like the AA breakdown chap in the television advert, he is a very, very, very nice man. That, at least, is the image of our Prime Minister that his Tory Government and the Tory press would like the British public to believe in.

But there wasn't much 'niceness' about the methods used by Mr. Major's whips last month to persuade wavering Tory MPs to support the Government in its bill to force the Maastricht Treaty through parliament. When it got near the time for the crucial vote, panic seized the Government, for it seemed there was a very real possibility that the Euro-sceptics had mustered enough support to defeat the bill. It seems the word went out to the whips that any measures thought necessary to twist the arms of members to bring them into line would be in order. Some of the whips took this very literally.

In the case of one opponent of the Treaty, his wife was telephoned with a view to persuading her to put pressure on her husband to vote in favour — with dark hints to her about his future party career prospects if she failed to do so. In a number of other cases, threats were made to the MPs in question that their wives would be fed with stories of marital infidelity on their part — regardless of whether there was the slightest evidence that such stories were true. Presumably the 'no-smoke-without-fire' rule was what the makers of the threats had in mind.

One Euro-sceptic known to have a fondness for drink was wheedled into a Commons Bar and plied with ample quantities of it until, in a state of near-collapse, he was packed into a taxi and sent home.

THUGGERY

Physical intimidation was a tactic which Government supporters did not shirk — even when women were on the opposite end. Teresa Gorman, one of the opponents of the Treaty, encountered jostling when she made for the 'no' lobby, and had to engage in considerable manoeuvre to get to her destination. This apparently happened to a number of her colleagues who had the same intention; and some of them, being the wimps that they are, finally gave up. But where a bit more 'leaning on' was needed, the whips sent for their largest operative, the 18-stone member for Staffordshire South David Lightbown, to put the real frighteners on would-be 'no' voters. He was seen chasing one of them, Halesowen & Stourbridge MP Warren Hawksley, all the way out of the Commons chamber;

Major's whips use tactics of the gutter to force through Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Hawksley was later witnessed joining the abstainers. In another confrontation Lightbown was seen squaring up to slightly-built Nicholas Budgen until some of the latter's colleagues arrived and ushered him out of danger's way.

In the end the Government got its majority — by three votes. It clearly would not have done had these Mafia tactics not been employed to bring a number of recalcitrant Tories to heel. Of course, it does not say much for the bottle of the latter that these tactics met with such success. But that is another story.

It is inconceivable that the 'nice' Mr. Major was unaware of what was going on and had not given the wink of approval to it — though of course it was entirely in character for him to assume an air of mea-non-culpa when questioned about all the shenanigans afterwards.

Such are the processes by which, under our hallowed 'democracy', the people's representatives when elected go to parliament to carry out their constituents' will. Such are the glorious freedoms and rights that are enshrined in our parliamentary system!

No doubt, if and when the Maastricht Treaty becomes law and the diktat of the European bureaucracy is imposed upon the British nation, with what little national freedom we have left thrown out of the window, apologists for the system will say that it was all done democratically — by the Tory Party being given its mandate by the people in a general election and then by its members in the House voting according to their consciences and judgement.

Amen.

Defend the Monarchy: Change the Royal Family!

A PERSONAL VIEW BY JAMES THURGOOD

The following article represents the opinions of the writer only, and should not be taken to constitute the editorial policies of British Nationalist or any part of the programme of the British National Party. We print it because we feel it is an interesting contribution to a very topical debate.

NATIONALISTS and patriots in Britain should support the Crown. I say this not for any reasons of sloppy sentimentalism but because it is a wholly practical policy. Nationhood and national identity rest very much on symbols and tradition, and those found to be tearing away at symbols and tradition will usually turn out to be the very people who want to undermine nationhood.

Unlike countries such as France and the United States, Britain has almost no tradition of republicanism. A Britain without the Monarchy will not be recognisable as the Britain we know. There is another important practical consideration: Monarchy constitutes one of the few remaining institutions that could serve as a rallying point for the renewal of vital family ties between the people of the United Kingdom and their kinfolk overseas, whom we have tragically alienated over the past 30-40 years and whom we must win back if the British race is to have a future.

All this having been said, it would be stretching complacency to extremes if we were to pretend that all is well with the Monarchy today. Britain's problems with its Royal Family, intensified by three marital breakdowns, have been given fresh impetus by the recent Windsor Castle fire, and the question of who should pay for the Castle's restoration. Add to these matters the arguments over the Queen's enormous wealth and the question of whether she should pay taxes, and we have a series of disagreeable nettles which before very long are going to require grasping.

The Daily Mail, as monarchist paper as any, carried a headline on November 24th which read: 'Why the Queen must listen'. It was followed by a frank article concerning royal finances, and it echoed what it claimed as the majority view among the British public that Her Majesty should pay for a portion of the repairs of Windsor.

The trouble is that it should not be necessary for a daily newspaper to appeal to the Queen to 'listen'; she should long ago, and of her own accord, have paid attention to public concern over the cost of the Royal Family's upkeep and taken her own initiative to allay public criticism, for instance volunteering either to pay tax or to take a substantial cut in royal allowances. She has done none of these things, and that is a central part of the problem.

BEHIND THE MARITAL TROUBLES

It is natural to sympathise with Her Majesty over the marital ups and downs affecting three of her four offspring (the fourth, Prince Edward, seems at the moment to be a long way from marriage of any kind, and that may constitute a problem of an entirely different nature).

However, it usually takes two to make a bad marriage, and even where blame may fairly be placed on one partner alone this calls into the question the other's judgement in choosing that partner in the first place. The public has a right to expect royals to uphold higher standards in all these regards than Mr. & Mrs. Average. Our royals have failed to do so.

But this is not all.

It is understood and accepted that our constitution bars the Royal Family from involvement in political controversy. Nevertheless, that does not make it a mandatory requirement for Royalty to give its consent, let alone its official seal

Low birthrate spells doom to British Ulster

BRITAIN could yet lose Northern Ireland — not through military defeat by the IRA but through the outbreeding of the pro-British population in the province.

This is the alarming message of a report in the Independent on Sunday of the 1st November. According to this report, the birthrate among the Catholic community in Ulster is now so much higher than that of Protestants that Catholics could become a majority in the not so remote future.

As the report acknowledged, 'Catholic' and 'nationalist' are not synonymous, and a substantial number of Catholics would prefer to stay within the United Kingdom. The coming of a Catholic majority would not therefore immediately constitute a majority wanting to break away from Britain. Nevertheless, the latter would inevitably come about with the passing of time — if present trends are not reversed.

Neither loyalists in Ulster nor their allies in Mainland Britain will have anything of which to complain if this happens. For years BN and the British National Party have proclaimed that a low birthrate is tantamount to national suicide. The only solution is to reverse the trend and give every encouragement to healthy British couples to have plenty of children!

LOYALISTS ON THE MARCH
— But for how much longer? The latest trend points to their being outbred in Northern Ireland.

IMMIGRATION TURNS BRITAIN INTO ALIEN BATTLEFIELD

OF all the new tensions and conflicts that have been introduced into our country as a result of mass alien immigration, one form in particular seems to have been coming to the fore just lately.

'Multi-cultural' Britain is increasingly becoming a battleground for some of the newcomers to fight out their internal squabbles with one another.

As the last of her poisonous gifts to the British people on quitting office two years ago, Margaret Thatcher gave a green light to any number of Hong Kong Chinese to flood to this country. She and her fellow Tories, for whom private money-making is the only thing that matters, saw these people — enriched for generations by the City of London's lavish investments of British cash, technology and jobs to the colony — as money-makers in the true Tory mould who would bring more of the types of entrepreneurial activity they admire to Britain. Also, unlike many of the native British yokels who have become disaffected with Toryism, the Hong Kong Chinese were doubtless seen by Mrs. Thatcher and her successors as a good new source of Tory votes.

Even before Mrs. Thatcher's decision to throw the borders open to the Hong Kong Chinese, however, there had already emerged another side to Chinese immigration which she and her fellow top Tories have been less eager to discuss.

GANGSTER NETWORK

For some years, our police have been aware of growing activity in this country by the Chinese gangster network known as the Triads. Now, according to the Derby Evening Telegraph, in the run-up to 1997, when Hong Kong reverts to China and a mass exodus from the colony is expected, police are bracing themselves for "bloody gang wars."

solve faraway problems by admitting refugees, on allegedly 'humanitarian' grounds, to countries like Britain. Turks and Kurds have always hated each other, and have been slugging it out in the Middle East since medieval times. Admitted to Britain, they not unnaturally start to slug it out here too. At the end of it all, nothing changes for either group. All that happens is that British people end up getting caught in the crossfire — in an alien struggle that has nothing to do with them, as Turkey's civil wars are senselessly imported to British soil.

VIOLENCE BETWEEN BANGLADESHIS

Meanwhile, just down the road in the neighbouring East London borough of Tower Hamlets gang war has also broken out among the Bangladeshi immigrant community. The violence was sparked off to begin with by a fight at a football match in the heavily Bangladeshi-occupied Spitalfields area. A team from the Bangladeshi community in the North West London was savagely attacked by a knife-wielding gang drawn from the local neighbourhood.

Revenge attacks followed. Tower Hamlets councillor Akikur Rahman, himself a Bangladeshi, reported seeing up to 400 Asian youths fighting amongst themselves. Passers-by who tried to intervene were themselves attacked and forced to flee.

Councillor Rahman, who said he saw Bangladeshis as young as 12 joining in the violence, stated that he feared the mob terror might, to quote his own words, "bring the local Bangladeshi community into disrepute." The district, which the immigrants recently tried to get renamed 'Banglatown', still has a strong white community, and many of these people have been turning to the British National Party. Not the least of reasons for this is that violence which starts off internally between factions within the immigrant communities sooner or later tends to spill out against the British host population. This has certainly happened in Tower Hamlets, where only just over a month ago 89-year-old Margaret Warren was mugged by four young Asian immigrants for £15.

Speaking from her hospital bed, Margaret said of the area in which she has lived all her life: "It never used to be like this."

These have in fact begun already as rival Triad gangs, some with god-fathers back in Hong Kong, try to muscle in on each other's territory. In order to meet this, Derbyshire police have had to set up a specialist team to monitor Triad activities.

The Triads are thought to be the biggest criminal organisation in the world. They are involved in drugs, prostitution and protection rackets, controlling nightclubs, casinos and gambling dens. In Britain, which does not even have laws against membership, they also go in for moneylending and pirated Chinese videos. Recruits swear deadly oaths of allegiance, with some press-ganged into joining.

Derby police say they are present in the town, as in much of the rest of Britain from London, Glasgow and the big cities to moderately-sized provincial towns like Winchester, which have seen ugly and brutal gang feuds, involving the use of axes, cleavers and other lethal weapons in violent confrontations between rival Triad factions.

Derby police report that their attempts to penetrate the world of the local Triads in their area are frustrated by a wall of silence from the Chinese community, which they say the Triads rule by fear. One officer remarked: "It is an organisation that the Mafia could take lessons from."

GANG WAR IN EAST END

Just as little should ordinary Britons want to see introduced into their country the kind of armed faction fighting, some of it with automatic weapons, that has come to parts of London's East End with the admission to this country of waves of Kurds — claiming to be refugees from oppression back in Turkey. According to reports in the Sunday Telegraph and elsewhere, there have already been a number of shoot-outs between Kurds and Turks in Hackney since the former started pitching up in numbers in the borough to work in the local sweat-shop economy that has been allowed to sprout there to accommodate them and their cheap labour. Of late it seems that this tribal clash has been getting worse, and it is not set to end in a hurry.

If nothing else, it is a pointer to the futility of bleeding-hearted efforts to

BRITAIN 1992: MULTI-RACIAL BLISS

This collection of recent newspaper headlines gives some indication of the state of war now racking our towns and cities in consequence of the insane immigration policies of successive governments.

GERMANY: THE TRUTH BEHIND THE MEDIA HATE CAMPAIGN

ON MONDAY, November 23rd, a house in Moelln, near Hamburg, containing three members of a Turkish family was firebombed and the three, a grandmother and two young girls, lost their lives.

Immediately, a wave of mass emotion was sparked off by the news media throughout the world, including Britain. The outrage had to be the work of so-called 'neo-nazis' — there could be no other explanation.

The subsequent funeral was turned into a political event, with more 'anti-nazi' hysteria whipped up by the press and TV.

Only a little later, tucked away in the small print of a report in The Observer of November 29th, was there an admission that the police were by no means certain the bombing had any political or racial motive at all; on the contrary, it could have been part of a feud between rival families of Turks. This is just one of many stories of trouble in Germany that have been exploited by the media with the aim of inflaming world opinion against Germans who object to the avalanche of immigrants thrust upon them by the idiotic policies of successive German Governments — not unlike the idiocy of British Governments which have done the same thing here.

Undoubtedly, there have been terrorist acts carried out by some Germans (not all of them nationalists or 'nazis') against refugees and immigrants from abroad, and these are to be deplored. What has received very much less attention from the media is the wave of criminality and terrorism unleashed by sections of the immigrant communities against indigenous Germans. The plain fact is that a great many Germans have been driven to the point of despair by the insane pro-immigration policies of the Kohl Government and the failure in Germany, as everywhere else, of multi-racialism; and some of them have over-reacted.

But, as one of our German correspondents has informed us, the real and proven cases of maltreatment and terrorism against immigrants that can be factually attributed to so-called 'neo-nazis' are far fewer than would appear from media reports. As in Britain, an incident in which immigrants are the victims only has to occur and it is immediately recorded as 'racism', whereas it could be attributable to any one of a number of motives and causes.

So what is the game of the media? We suspect it is simply to discredit, by all means possible, the real wave of patriotism and nationalism that is emerging in Germany — manifest in perfectly lawful and peaceful opposition to immigration — by linking it to acts of terrorism blown up out of all proper proportion by sensationalist reporting. Seems familiar, doesn't it?

The Moelln fire: Police believe it could have been the result of an inter-Turkish feud.

AS RACE WAR ESCALATES...

British kids are abandoned to vicious immigrant violence...

FURY has followed a vicious assault by a mob of heavily armed adult Asian thugs on white schoolchildren in Glasgow. Parents have been outraged by the attitude of the authorities, who have completely failed to protect their youngsters from this savagery.

On Thursday, the 29th October, the streets of the city's South Side, heavily flooded with immigrants, mainly Asian, exploded in what a TV journalist on the Scotland Today programme described as "race war."

White children, some as young as twelve, were ambushed as they left their school, Shawlands Academy, at going-home time. The youngsters were assaulted with knives, baseball bats, lead pipes and other weapons by the jeering 100-strong immigrant mob as they left the school gates.

One eye-witness, housewife Jane Carroll, said: "A boy was jumped by youths with baseball bats. I don't know how they didn't kill him." Shopkeeper Jack Taylor described how one boy was chased onto his premises: "There was an old woman in the shop when they came in. They started hitting one schoolboy with a length of pipe."

One 12-year-old girl pupil described how a knife was brandished only inches from her face: "Four Asian boys chased me nearly all the way home with the knife. I'm frightened because they stay round the corner from me."

A number of the children were injured. Four were hospitalised, with one needing stitches. This was Shawlands head prefect Gavin Greene, who described having to fight for his life against four Asians who came at him with fists and feet. His spectacles were broken and his cheek gashed by the glass.

It seems that Gavin was a particular target of the mob. Only shortly before, he had reprimanded an Asian pupil for misconduct.

The mob members, by his own account and that of other witnesses, were all non-pupils at the school, being older youths and men.

Two Asian men estimated to be in their forties were reported to have been seen handing out heavy offensive weapons to their fellow hoodlums from the back of a white Transit van minutes before the attack.

By the testimony of a number of children at Shawlands, racial trouble had been brewing at the school for some time. One young girl said that minor incidents between white pupils and Asians had been happening for some weeks. She thought that Asian pupils had got together with their brothers and friends to plan the terror attack in advance, and these had merely seized on Gavin Greene's action in ticking off a misbehaving Asian as a pretext.

stance of "hear no evil, see no evil..." Rather than admit that the cherished multi-racial experiment which she has been promoting for all she's been worth has badly misfired, Maggie Chetty, senior community relations officer for Strathclyde, could only whine that she was "shocked and saddened."

Then, as if deliberately playing the blind, deaf and dumb fool, she went on to say: "We have no indication of anything deep-rooted behind this."

Her colleague, regional councillor Michael Miller of nearby Pollokshields, has followed the same line. He said he was "not aware" of racial tension in the area, whilst Glasgow teachers' union secretary Jack Collins sang much the same tune. According to him, the Shawlands mayhem was a "one-off incident."

The lie is given to this by the fact that the school has a long record of tension. A while back, Asians were getting steamed up against a teacher for allegedly making a 'racist' remark to a girl pupil. This case fell, but everyone at the school seems to have been walking on glass ever since, with special provision being made to record the smallest 'racist incident', even name-calling.

Even whilst they deny it with their lips, it is obvious that the forcing together by the multi-racialists of young Brits and young Asians has produced no happier results in Scotland than it has in England's multi-racial urban hell-holes — and the multi-racialists must be aware of this.

THE USUAL EXCUSES

Whilst some Asians resident in Glasgow's South Side have sought to distance themselves from the thuggery of their kinfolk at Shawlands, others seem to think there may be a bandwagon to jump on. Dr. Mozammel Huq of the self-styled 'Scottish Asian Action Committee' blamed what he called 'racism' for the mob violence. According to him, "The difficulty faced by ethnic minority youths in getting mainstream employment is not helping things" — as if there were no native Scottish youngsters facing life on the dole!

The local Daily Record newspaper went one stage further. Yes, you've guessed it — the BNP was to blame! In a report by Sandra Dick and John Naim it was stated that: "The neo-Nazi British National Party is known to have a strong presence on Glasgow's South Side, where there is a large coloured community."

One thing above all has enraged school parents. This was the absence of police protection at the school gates at 3.40 p.m. on the day of the brutal attack on their children, despite the fact that pupils and staff alike knew that trouble was brewing that day, and Shawlands headmaster Gordon Wilson had especially asked for a police presence.

At an angry public meeting on the Monday afterwards to thrash out what had happened, all that Superintendent Sandra Hood of Aikenhead Road police station could do was virtually shrug her shoulders, saying of the violence: "It's taken place and we can't undo it."

...while immigrants get special protection

QUITE DIFFERENT from the situation in Glasgow as reported above is the reaction of the powers that be where it is immigrants who are alleged to be on the receiving end of aggravation from the British people. Here the authorities move heaven and earth to coddle their immigrant protégés, whilst putting native Britons down.

One example of this is in the overwhelming white British community of Bermondsey, which falls within the South London Borough of Southwark.

The pro-immigrant Labour Borough Council recently closed down the nearly all-white Scott Lidgett Boys' Secondary School, which is in the heart of one of Bermondsey's staunchest working class neighbourhoods. The pretext for this was that pupil numbers were declining.

But soon afterwards, the school was handed over to Southwark College. £600,000 of local poll tax-payers' money was used to turn it into a centre for art and design — with a strong emphasis on 'ethnic culture'. This has led to a daily influx of hundreds of black students.

Ordinary British people in the flats facing the college across Drummond Road see this as a deliberate attempt forcibly to flood their area with non-Whites. Southwark Council has been scheming to do this for some time by one means or another.

Speaking of the situation, one local landlady put the majority feeling tactfully: "I think the local council help cause racism by moving so many Blacks into the college." She added: "Some Blacks don't like it either. They feel they are being set up."

Speaking for the general climate of opinion among the native local white folk, who for generations have made the area, she said: "There was a great feeling of injustice when some houses they had been keeping in Cherry Tree Gardens went to black people."

STRONG WHITE REACTION

The response of other local residents is rumoured to have been straightforwardly two-fisted. Seeing the opening of the college arts faculty at Scott Lidgett as a deliberate provocation by Southwark Council's multi-racialist establishment against a community proud of its British identity and determined to protect it, some are reputed to have resorted to forceful methods to eliminate what they have inevitably seen as a deadly threat. One or two ethnic minority students claim to have been attacked and one to have been threatened with a pit-bull terrier. Another was even shot in the face with an air-gun pellet.

In response to the situation they themselves have deliberately set up as part of their ongoing assault on the Whites of Bermondsey, the authorities have instantly taken security measures of a kind quite unheard of in areas of London and other cities where Britons have been on the receiving end of criminal violence from immigrants.

Southwark Council has managed to find another £20,000 to fortify the former Scott Lidgett building with barbed wire, steel fencing and security guards. Metropolitan Police plain-clothes officers have also been put on alert to mingle with students so as to ambush any white so-called 'racial attackers'.

WHITE RENEGADE COUNCILLOR

One of the leading figures behind the succession of moves to destroy white Bermondsey is Southwark Council leader Sally Keeble, whose nose was badly put out of joint by the way in which local folk broke up a pro-immigrant march through their area in August 1991.

Some of her extreme left-wing friends of the self-styled 'Socialist Workers' Party' (sometimes masquerading under their 'Anti-Nazi League' logo) have been trying to con Bermondsey folk into signing a petition against what they call 'racism' in the area. This has fooled very few people.

PROTECTION FOR BLACKS
Afro-Caribbean student passes through gates at Southwark College under the eye of a hired security guard. Councils around Britain have not been prepared to provide the same facilities to our own folk under threat from immigrant gangs.

The petition was a flop, and local residents have spontaneously acted to remove anti-British SWP posters from their neighbourhood.

In fact, Bermondsey long ago saw through the Labour Party as a coalition of closet reds and 'ethnic minorities'. Now too, Labour's street-level Socialist 'Workers' Party allies are being seen for what they are — most of them in fact well-heeled, middle class student pervers, of both sexes, some from Jewish and other alien backgrounds.

In these circumstances, the power-wielders of the multi-racialist establishment may find they have to watch their step a bit more in the future in trying to push patriotic British folk around for the advantage of alien newcomers.

ON YER BIKE!

That was the message given by locals when a gaggle of 'anti-racist' misfits tried to shuffle through the respectable, white and British South London suburb of Eltham on Saturday, the 7th November.

The 200 or so self-styled 'anti-nazis', mostly homosexual squatters, red students, ethnic minority agitators, many of them on the local Greenwich Labour Council's pay-roll, and other imported low life claimed to be marching in protest over the allegedly 'racist' killings of three black and Asian teenagers.

As is well known, the type of people making up such 'anti-nazi' and 'anti-racist' rabbles as this show no interest at all in racial murders in which members of the British majority are the victims. In any case, police believe there is no evidence of any racial motive at all in the killings of the three minority members in question — Rohit Duggal, Ruhullah Aramesh and Rolan Adams.

Not surprisingly, Eltham residents took this shambling procession through their streets by what they saw as arrogant troublemakers from well outside the area as an insult.

Several hundred local folk, with the youth of the neighbourhood especially well represented, turned out to join forces with a hard core of British National Party members in staging a strong counter-demonstration in defence of the local British community.

After a brief confrontation in the centre of Eltham, in which the unwashed intruders were given clearly to understand that their presence was not wanted there, the patriotic counter-demonstrators moved to a local park where the 'anti-racists' were scheduled to have a rally. It was hoped to hold a meaningful dialogue with the latter in which they could be firmly persuaded of the error of their ways.

However, the 'anti-racists' seem spontaneously to have taken the point on this occasion. As nationalist counter-demonstrators removed an offensive placard display of anti-British propaganda that the red rabble had erected in the park for their rally, and as growing numbers of local people mustered to support the patriotic counter-demonstration, the 'anti-racists' thought better of the whole business. Seemingly relieved to get out of what they evidently found an increasingly alarming situation, they beat a hasty retreat, only to be glad to slink back to wherever it was they had come from. At any rate they, so to speak, repatriated themselves out of Eltham.

Amid the debris they left behind them, it appears that one casualty was a well-known local 'anti-racist' campaigner who, according to reports, was arrested by police for brandishing a knife.

According to other reports, one of those present on the march was another well-known self-styled 'anti-nazi' campaigner from North London whose line of business is stirring up left-wing and minority hooliganism against nationalists whilst they go about their lawful business on the streets. If the reports are correct, he found it hard to hide among the thin turn-out that was all he and his fellow reds were able to put together on the day.

Interestingly, the reds had promised during the previous week that they would turn up in Eltham with 'thousands'. But something seems to have gone wrong with their planning somewhere.

Meanwhile, if Mr. X from North London really was there that is just one more small measure of just how alien to the area the 'anti-racists' actually were, and how shrewd the instincts of the local folk were in recognising this and stepping forth to throw them out!

It went on to say that: "Reggae and rap belted out as an estimated 50,000 festival-goers danced and visited stalls selling books, art, clothes and food. The event was supported by trade unions, including NALGO, local organisations and the black press.

BNP in North East makes headlines with campaign against pit closures

BRITISH NATIONAL PARTY activists in the North East of England have been conducting an energetic campaign against the Government's programme for closing 31 coal mines and putting 31,000 more miners out of work. In this they have caused great embarrassment to officials of Arthur Scargill's National Union of Miners, who have felt bound to dissociate themselves from the BNP — though in fact the latter's policy for keeping the mines open is similar to the position adopted by the NUM.

A report appearing in the Sunderland Echo headlined BNP activity in nearby Easington and Seaham, where local collieries are booked for closure. The report referred to party leaflets being distributed around the areas demanding "a ban on cheap foreign coal imports." It went on to describe the sour grapes of NUM officials at the BNP presence, quoting area secretary Dave Hopper as saying: "We have had a long struggle against the rise of groups like this. We don't need their type of assistance." Then getting in his two-pennyworth was Labour MP John Cummings, who said: "Under no circumstances will we share platforms with these people... We have no truck with fringe groups."

We were not aware that the BNP had ever asked to share a platform with the likes of Messrs. Cummings and Hopper. However, this much might be said: if these NUM and Labour people were sincere in their championing of the miners' cause they would welcome support from any quarter for keeping the pits open. Their bitchiness towards the BNP just underlines what we have always been saying: that to the left industrial grievances are merely issues to be used for the furtherance of their own squalid political ends. In fact neither the NUM nor the Labour Party have ever done anything for Britain's miners — they both support the very international system of trade that has let foreign coal into this country and hastened the shutting of the pits.

Anyhow, what all this whining by the left has done is earn the BNP campaign a great deal of publicity — so we ought to pass them a vote of thanks for that, if for nothing else!

Well done, NE Region of the BNP for an excellent campaign which has already brought the party message for industrial recovery into huge numbers of homes!

DEFEND THE MONARCHY: CHANGE THE ROYAL FAMILY!

of approval, to policies of national treason.

No-one could have forced the Queen to endorse, in her last public speech, the handing over of British sovereignty to Europe — had she decided, as a matter of principle and of duty, that she could not do so.

Nor could anyone have forced Prince Charles to give his implicit blessing to government policies of multi-racialism by granting the favour of his royal presence at numerous occasions and events set up to promote the multi-racial society — had he been determined not to do so. In fact, His Royal Highness has gone far beyond the requirements of customary royal protocol in identifying himself with the multi-racial cause by his constant appearances in Britain's immigrant ghettos, his public appeals for financial support for those ghettos and his proclaimed fondness for numerous black entertainers, particularly so-called 'musicians'.

Not only have our royals not made any effort to resist national trends, political, demographic and cultural, which are leading to the ruin of Britain as a nation; when given the opportunity, they have shown positive eagerness to promote them.

All of which goes to pose the big question: should we not view the Monarchy as an institution as one thing — and this particular Royal Family as another?

Looking back to the first Hanover King, George I, have we really been well served by the dynasty that has followed him? And is it not conceivable that, as more than once in the past, it may be time for a change of dynasties — while keeping the institution of Monarchy itself intact and inviolate?

RULE OF THE BEST

Monarchy, like aristocracy, makes no sense at all if it is not an institution that raises certain families to the top rank in national affairs because they are endowed with special qualities in their genetic inheritance which set them above ordinary people, and which in consequence fit them uniquely for special public responsibilities and duties of which ordinary people are, generally speaking, not capable.

It has been our custom in the past, when there is clear evidence that the royal blood does not measure up to these exacting standards, to consign it to the sidelines and find new royal blood which will.

Therefore, is it such an outrageous and revolutionary proposal to say that the time has come to pension off our present Royal Family and to replace them with another?

It goes without saying that an such alternative royal family would require to be selected with enormous care from among the best endowed families in the country and the overseas White Commonwealth.

The new Royal Family, if we decide to opt for one, should not be expected to live in council houses; they should be maintained in the pomp and grandeur appropriate to their role in the nation's life.

But their various royal residences and estates should for the most part be regarded as the property of the nation and not as their own personal property. They should be given living allowances from out of public funds commensurate with their rank and duties. These allowances should be substantial but not excessive. The Queen's present allowance of £7.9 million a year is quite plainly excessive.

And the royals should pay taxes from out of those allowances, just as the rest of us are taxed on our incomes.

Should this be done, and should another disaster befall a royal residence as happened to Windsor last month, it is not likely that the nation as a whole will object to paying the bill.

ANGER OVER PARTY'S PIT CAMPAIGN

By JOHN BAINBRIDGE

RIGHT-wing extremists are using angry Durham pit communities as a recruiting ground.

British National Party (BNP) posters have appeared in shops in Easington Colliery, alongside coal campaign bills.

And workers for the BNP, which was set up by disaffected members of the National Front, were spotted in Seaham after the announcement that Vane Tempest Colliery was to close.

The leaflets in Easington appear to mirror local campaigners' demands for a ban on cheap foreign coal imports.

But local people fear the party could provide a rallying point for angry, unemployed young people in the communities. Campaigners today dissociated themselves from the BNP literature.

"We have had a long struggle against the rise of groups like this," said NUM area secretary Dave Hopper.

"We don't need their type of assistance. We are going for a united campaign, not divisive, and their policies are divisive."

Labour MP John Cummings added: "Under no circumstances will we share platforms with these people."

"We have a broad-based community campaign, but we will have no truck with fringe groups."

The BNP posters in Easington are headed: "Stop Unemployment — Ban Imports" and carry a photograph of miners leaving a pit head.

It calls for a progressive ban on the import of all foreign manufactured goods which can be produced in Britain, including coal.

And it warns that the advent of the single European market will see remaining import barriers come down, putting more British workers on the dole.

"There is concern about British industry being lost to cheap imports in the long term," said BNP deputy leader John Edmonds. "There is a drive towards internationalism."

GETTING THE PARTY VIEWPOINT OVER

This report appeared in the Sunderland Echo on November 18th. Large slices of BNP policy were explained to tens of thousands of readers.

REORGANISATION AT BN

As from next issue, a reorganisation in the staff of British Nationalist will take effect. John Morse will continue as editor, but production work on the paper will be in different hands. A new production editor has been appointed, whose name for the moment will not be disclosed for security reasons. This move will be a very positive one, for it will free previous production staff from burdensome and time-consuming work, with the result that the time saved can be reallocated to other important tasks in promoting the British National Party.

Readers may from next issue find some changes in the style of BN, which will reflect the introduction of new talents and ideas.

The BNP also has units in Richmond-on-Thames, Redbridge, Barking & Dagenham, Isle of Sheppey, Reading, Gloucestershire, Bristol & Bath, Stevenage, Bedford, Stourbridge, Walsall, Grantham, Bolton & Bury, Warrington, Batley, Hull, York, Tees-side, Sunderland, Stirling & Alloa, Fife, Cumbernauld, Greenock, Lanarkshire, Ayr, Cumnock (Ayrshire), Inverness and Belfast. If you want to make contact with any of these units, or start a new unit, please write to BNP Head Office at PO Box 117, Welling, Kent DA16 3DW.

'RIGHTS FOR WHITES' CAMPAIGN COMES TO SCOTLAND

BNP activists meet with warm public response after race violence hits Glasgow suburb

SCOTLAND is at long last starting to get a taste of the malignant effects of the multi-racial society so long experienced in English towns and cities. For years, the British National Party's energetic active units north of the border have been warning that an explosive situation is building up there, with the growth of the Asian immigrant population, particularly in Glasgow. Last month their warnings were vindicated when a vicious outbreak of race violence occurred in the Shawlands area of the city. A group of white youngsters, some no more than 12 years old, were set upon by a gang of Asians and savagely beaten as they left Shawlands Academy school in the afternoon. This affair is described in greater detail in our report on page 5.

The British National Party responded quickly to the emergency, and an energetic campaign has been conducted in Shawlands during November to provide angry Whites a lawful and peaceful channel for their opposition to the evil effects of multi-racialism. A Day of Action was held on the 7th November, during which large numbers of leaflets were given out. There was also a sale of British Nationalist in the local shopping precinct, and people were even seen stopping their cars in the middle of the road to buy copies. Local response was enthusiastic in the extreme. A further Day of Action with similar results was held in the area on the 21st November.

A week later, on November 28th, the BNP made media headlines all over Scotland and even got reportage on a smaller scale nationwide when approximately 50 activists staged a strong counter-demonstration against an 'anti-racist' march by assorted left-wingers and immigrant groups in Glasgow. This paralleled the demonstration in Eltham, South London, on the 7th November reported elsewhere in this issue.

The repercussions of the Shawlands affair are still being felt throughout Scotland, where the school incident received large publicity (although it was almost entirely hushed up elsewhere), and it is dawning on many Scots that they have a race problem

SKIRMISH

Victory in court

An important legal victory was recorded on November 30th when British National Party Chairman John Tyndall and National Activities Organiser Richard Edmonds were acquitted at Sutton Magistrates Court of charges resulting from the placing of BNP stickers and posters on sites in the area contrary to the Town & Country Planning Act of 1990, which prohibits the display of advertisements in public places without prior council planning permission.

The two BNP leaders' defence was that these items had been placed without their knowledge and consent, and this was accepted by the court, with the panel of three magistrates passing a verdict of 'not guilty'. The action had been brought by Liberal-Democrat-controlled Sutton Council — obviously out of political malice, since hundreds of other types of posters have been displayed in the area without planning consent but no court action has been taken against the publishers. The council's attempted vendetta against the BNP will have cost the local taxpayers some thousands of pounds in paper work and legal bills, all to no purpose.

It must be emphasised that this case is separate from that brought against Mr. Tyndall and Mr. Edmonds by nearby Merton Council, which is now the subject of an appeal to the High Court, and for which a Legal Fund has been launched. The latest figure for donations to this fund is £1,134.00. Our thanks to all who have given!

ROUND AND ABOUT BNP grows in Ulster

The British National Party is really beginning to 'take off' in Northern Ireland, particularly in the Portadown and Craigavon areas. Keen local activists have gained an impressive amount of publicity in Ulster-based newspapers. Our activist groups have been enthusiastically supporting the nationwide 'Join us!' campaign and have been working hard to establish links with other loyalist groups, such as the Ulster Clubs. Everyone on the Mainland has nothing but admiration for our brave supporters 'over the water'.

Richard Edmonds in Darlington

BNP National Activities Organiser Richard Edmonds addressed an enthusiastic BNP meeting in Darlington on November 28th, attended by members and supporters from throughout the North East of England. The North East has recently been an area of increased party activity, particularly with regard to opposition to pit closures in the area (See our report on page 7).

Dave Bruce in Exeter

BNP National Organiser David Bruce addressed a party meeting in Exeter on November 29th. This was attended by nearly thirty supporters — a good number for a region in which party strength is scattered over a large area with few cities. The BNP in Devon has been making steady progress over the past two or three years, despite operating in a part of the country where there is no major race problem.

What we stand for

- The establishment of a government of national unity that will put an end to nationally divisive party warfare; the return of leadership and statesmanship to British affairs.
- An end to immigration and a start to repatriation.
- British withdrawal from the Common Market
- The disbanding of the multi-racial Commonwealth and its replacement by a new Commonwealth of self-governing white states.
- British ownership and control of British industry and resources.
- Protection of British industry by the selective exclusion of foreign manufactured goods from the British market.
- An end to the financial swindle that causes inflation and slump, and its replacement by a sane and fair financial system that will give the people the purchasing power to buy the goods they produce.
- The subordination of the power of the City to the power of government, and the harnessing of the City to the needs of British industry.
- The regeneration of British farming, with the object of achieving the maximum possible self-sufficiency in food production.
- Rejection of both the poll tax and its substitute, the new 'property tax', and a return to the old rates system, though with fairer rebates allowing for differences in income and in the numbers occupying properties.
- A healthy environment for a healthy people — the protection of our countryside and an end to the architectural disfigurement of our towns and cities.
- Tougher treatment of criminals, including the return of the death penalty.
- A return to traditional methods of education, with stronger discipline in the classroom and the sacking of 'trendy' teachers.
- An alternative defence strategy: withdrawal from NATO, closure of all foreign military and air bases in Britain, the strengthening of Britain's defences and a position of armed neutrality.
- An end to overseas aid and the allocation of the money saved to the financing of repatriation and greater help for the needy at home.
- The crushing of the IRA, the termination of the Anglo-Irish Agreement and firm support for the loyalist majority in Northern Ireland.
- Repeal of the laws permitting homosexuality and abortion (except where the latter is the result of rape or necessary on medical grounds), the wiping out of AIDS and a return to healthy moral values aimed at strengthening the family and community.
